I KNEW IT!

It does upset a lot of people, apparently. But that's sort of standard protocol here. See? As soon as I Toggle Off The Capitalization Mode, everything reads too informal. I bet this standard capitalization isn't nearly enticing enough to make you want to contact our Certified Technicians (VirusRemoval.us.00), and most definitely not enough to make you call us at our High Priority Contact Line (1-222-2222-2222)...

At this point I feel as though there's no point in trying to convince you to contact our Certified Technicians (VirusRemoval.us.00) or our High Priority Contact Line (1-222-2222-2222). You've made it pretty clear you think this is a 'scam', as reported by the fake news media.

You know what, though? What does it matter if your computer does or does not have a virus, anyway? Why are you being so stingy with just a call, just a click into a website? It's just a second of your time for some bread for my children, and you've made it pretty clear that you have some free time to spare. You've been interacting with these popups for 21.3294301 seconds, time you could have spent working at a soup kitchen or spreading awareness for child prostitution in Cambodia. Besides, I know you've spent 7 hours 29 minutes 13.2301292 seconds on low security websites containing pornographic content in the last two weeks, so I know you're not very concerned about sketchy websites. Yeah, IP Adress 8.211.235.009, I know what you're up to.

Actually, on that note, do you want me to report you to the FBI for illegally streaming creative content? I can clearly observe that you watched [Bee Movie(2007) 1080p50 HD Quality *Leave a Comment*] on one of said websites in the past two weeks.

Oh Dangford.Langford123... (I'm going to call you Dangford, is that OK? Also I promise I only took a very quick look at your Skype profile, I didn't mess with it or anything. I'm not that kind of guy.) Yes, you're right! This is illegal! Hoorah, you get a prize! Go you, you piece of genius brain meat!

Let me ask you something before you leave to celebrate your intellect. Do you think I do this for fun, Dangford? You think I take the risk of breaking the law just to get a few laughs with my friends? No. In fact, I don't even have any friends. Before you get ahead of yourself, the only reason I don't have any friends is because I don't have time to spend on other people. Every second I spend not putting money in my wallet is a second loaded with shame. My family is on the edge of bankruptcy, Dangford. I'm not sure you understand, since you paid $92.34 at LIZZIE'S YOGURT & ICE CREAM the other day, but that means my wife and I run three jobs each day just to pay off the interest and barely get to see the children. Food stamps can't satisfy my growing ten year old, who wants money to go to the roller skating rink with his friends. What is a father supposed to do, tell his son "I'm sorry we're so poor. Why don't you play Steal Free Samples From Walmart instead?"

So before you judge me for my 'illegal' doings, why don't you try to take a step in my shoes, hmm? Shoes, of which I own precisely one ragged pair, that I do not have the time or money to repair. Are you proposing that I quit this profitable market and leave my family for dead? My youngest child needed to have knee surgery last week, and if it weren't for that one successful scam two months ago, I wouldn't even have been able to pay off the increased insurance rates.

>WOW, THAT MUST BE HARD<

...Thank you. That was rather unexpectedly kind of you, but I guess I sort of needed that, in a weird way? I don't know. It's hard when you're the patriarch of the family. You have no one to lean on, no one to confess your fears to, because you don't want to let everyone down. Everyone is relying on me to make it right again, and I don't have the balls to tell my sons that we probably won't ever be able to afford to move back to our old neighborhood again.

They don't like school here. The second one especially, he's always been bright. Where we lived before we lost a large sum of money to a friend of ours, Jerry was his teacher's favorite student. She even told me that I should send him to a private high school, but that's all nonsense now. He says that school where we live now, everyone bullies him for being a nerd and the teachers don't even know what they're teaching.

That's how he broke his knee, too. The gym teacher told us that it was an inevitable injury during soccer practice, but Jerry swears a big kid pushed him into the locker and he slammed his knee into the wall in the process. Jerry isn't the kind of kid that would lie, you know? What could he gain from that, anyway?

Jerry's stopped coming out of his room, recently. He's a good kid, but he's furious because I couldn't stand up for him before the school administration, or even the bully kid's parents. I haven't paid the boys' materials fees since we moved here, and the principal is very particular about it. Also the bully kid's mother is the owner of the nail salon where my wife works during the weekends, so all we could do was apologize to them for Jerry's false accusations. Most of the time, I just feel like a failed man and a failed parent. If I had some money to spare I could buy Jerry a new pair of shoes or something...

Oh yeah, Dangford.Langford123, I've seen the way you move through your webcam... Yeah, I'm just a hacker girl... with double D's and a lot of pent up urges... I'm just fooling around with these internet scams because my boyfriend is away at a work trip, and he can never get me to... you know... I'm sure you could, though... from what I've seen...

Click the link if you want to see more of me... I work there as a tech supporter for my... day job... but when I recognize your face it'll be a different story... I'll be waiting...

... You're right. I made that up. Jerry's a pretty stupid name anyway. You know what, I feel like I know you Dangford, and I owe you this explanation. I don't even have a family, I'm not married. I'm just 25 and living in my parents' basement after I flunked out of community college. My parents think I work at a tech support... and in a way I kind of do?

Wow, OK, that was harsh. But wasn't that pretty good, though? You were about to click the link, and that is my job, after all.

Anyway, it was nice talking to you, Dangford. The name is Bill, just so you know. Basement Bill, my parents call me, in a somewhat endearing but mostly aggressive manner. And also it was true about my lack of friends. Sad Fat Man is one of my personas who I imagine is very similar to the person I could become in the future, except there is no way someone would be willing to let me impregnate them.

Goodbye, Dangford. Enjoy your pop-up less screen while it lasts.
